

And the winners are...

... going to be announced at an online digital Awards ceremony on Friday 19 March 2021.

The Stone Federation Great Britain Natural Stone Awards presentation was going to take place in London on 4 December. As the restrictions of the coronavirus pandemic have ruled that out, the winners will now be announced online at a virtual awards ceremony on 19 March next year.

This year's ceremony would have marked the 20th time the Natural Stone Awards had been presented, which seemed particularly appropriate for the year 2020.

Unfortunately, the pandemic has spoiled that, although they are still the 2020 Awards. And nothing can spoil the honour of winning a Natural Stone Award for the teams involved in the projects that receive the recognition.

There were a lot of entries, in spite of the difficulties, and the Awards will, as always, highlight the highest architectural and stonemasonry accomplishments since the Awards were presented previously by celebrity guest Loyd Grossman in front of a capacity audience of more than 360 at The Grange Tower Bridge Hotel in London.

Although the winners themselves remain undisclosed until March, in the meantime you can see just how fierce the competition has been with this look at the short-listed entries in this year's scheme.

You can also see the shortlist on the Awards website at bit.ly/NSAShortlist.
